

Six Dynasties Texts

Project Description & Assignment List

(posted May 5 2008)

Purpose The objective of this project, led by Al Dien, is to facilitate research about the Six Dynasties by producing a multidisciplinary guide to specific works written during the Six Dynasties and to a few later materials central to research on the period. Similar in scope to Early Chinese Texts: A Bibliographic Guide, edited by Michael Loewe, Six Dynasties Texts will be an easy-to-use reference that provides this information: contents of the work; discussion of authenticity & transmission; principal editions, modern annotations, secondary literature, and translations.

We seek your contribution! Two presses have already expressed interest in publishing the handbook, and we are eager to move forward with identifying contributors for all the proposed entries. Please examine the “Assignment List” below. If you're interested in writing on any titles that are not yet claimed, please contact a member of the editorial committee:

Al Dien aldien@stanford.edu, Alan Berkowitz aberkow1@swarthmore.edu, Cynthia Chennault cchenna@aall.ufl.edu, Keith Knapp keith.knapp@Citadel.edu.

Participants are encouraged to speak for more than one item since there is much to be done. Your suggestions for works not on the current “Assignment List” are also welcome. Keep in mind that the work should be important for research and a significant portion of it must still survive (items available only as citations or in fragmentary form are generally not included). Email addresses of current participants are available to EMC members (password protected).

Guidelines for Essays

Descriptions of content and accounts of the author should be concise; where pertinent, further references to additional sources can be included as footnotes or included in the list of secondary studies. At the same time, the entry should supply as much information as is available on the textual transmission, studies, commentaries, translations and indices or concordances since this sort of information is often inadequately treated in general reference works. It is crucial to exercise critical judgment in selecting what secondary studies are to be included.

In general, the essay's recommended length is 2000 to 3000 words, to be submitted in double-spaced typescript. See the sample essay on the Yanshi jiaxun 顏氏家訓. Entries on the collected works of literary authors may be briefer (about 600 words) unless the “quanji” is unusually voluminous or varied.

Deadline: September 30 2008

Send all essays electronically to Al Dien, who will distribute them by subject area among the members of the editorial committee.
